HOME EXTENSION CLUB MEMBERSHIP

Issued in furtherance of Cooperative Extension work,
Acts of May 8 and June 30, 1914, in cooperation with the U.S. Department of Agriculture. Leo E. Lucas, Director of Cooperative Extension Service, University of Nebraska,
Institute of Agriculture and Natural Resources.

Home Extension Clubs. They offer an opportunity for friendship, learning, and leadership. Clubs vary in their purpose and direction, but all are concerned with learning new ways to improve home and family life.

All across the state club members meet together in members' homes or community meeting rooms to share and learn new ideas.

To receive the latest information on what's new for home and family.
To meet with other homemakers for facts, fellowship and fun.

To have an opportunity to go places and do things—conferences, tours, county and state events for homemakers.

To share a belief in the importance of homemaking skills for a rewarding and fulfilling home and family life.

Anyone can be a member. If you're interested in keeping up to date on homemaking information and like learning in a group setting, Home Extension Club membership is for YOU.

There are currently 25,000 members of Home Extension Clubs in Nebraska. They include homemakers, working women, young mothers and grandmothers.

Clubs usually meet at a convenient time for their members. It may be morning, afternoon, or evening, depending on members' schedules and work or family commitments.
